Paul Mulvaney Speaks on Commodities Panel at Boston Managed Futures Forum

Boston, MA - Mulvaney Capital Management's CEO & CIO Paul Mulvaney debated the role commodities play in a diversified managed futures portfolio during the "Smart Ways to Invest in Commodities" panel at today's Talking Hedge Boston conference, How Managed Futures and Global Macro Strategies Optimize Institutional Portfolios.

The panel discussed the outlook for commodities, fundamental and systematic approaches to trading in the space, and potential benefits of investing in capacity-constrained funds that take advantage of the diversification offered by smaller, less liquid commodities.

Mr Mulvaney highlighted the fallacy of viewing "the commodities" as a monolithic block, citing smaller markets such as cocoa and live cattle that historically have shown little correlation to the big oil commodity trades.

Talking Hedge's How Managed Futures and Global Macro Strategies Optimize Institutional Portfolios, took place on 31st May and 1st June 2017. Talking Hedge events aim to bring together the best minds in alternative investing – allocators, managers and solutions providers – to have open and candid discussions about the tough issues and vast opportunities in alternative investing.
